Celebrating 10, Planning for 20

The 2009–2010 academic year was a banner year for the Radcliffe Institute and a year of great celebration, despite the constraints imposed by the economic downturn. Though smaller and leaner, the Radcliffe Institute Fellowship Program, Schlesinger Library, and Academic Engagement Programs all forged ahead with their respective activities. The Institute’s faculty and staff leaders responded to the projected five years of reduced resources by cutting budgets strategically in ways that both protected the excellence of the Institute’s core programs and prepared the stage for new growth.

The year opened with a resoundingly successful 10th Anniversary Symposium at the Institute in October. The symposium aimed to give friends of the Institute a taste of the kinds of interactions fellows enjoy on a daily basis during their fellowship year. Multidisciplinary panel discussions on challenging intellectual topics sparked moments of epiphany for many supporters as they witnessed firsthand the types of experiences through which a year at the Radcliffe Institute changes fellows’ work and lives. We then shared the success of this 10th Anniversary Symposium on a smaller scale with friends of the Institute in Los Angeles, New York, San Francisco, and Washington, DC.

Although the Fellowship Program had fewer fellows in 2009–2010, the richness of their experience was in no way diminished. The class was robust in geographic diversity, with international scholars hailing from the Australia, Canada, France, India, Israel, and the United Kingdom, along with two scholars at risk. The mix of perspectives and fields in this year’s fellowship class engendered many cross-disciplinary interactions. Informal clusters developed during the year on filmmaking and various approaches to the study of music. Formal clusters on economics and mathematics gave rise to serendipitous cross-disciplinary interaction, as economists and mathematicians came together to consider common issues and interests. This year also marked the Institute’s first “Math Week,” featuring three presentations on varied topics that gave fellows an idea of the breadth of the field of mathematics. Fellows in the creative arts interacted with the local arts community in new ways, and new collaborations were begun—including one between a poet and an Arabic scholar on translations of Arabic poetry and another between world-class documentary makers working in vastly different areas.

The 2009–2010 year was one of great productivity for the Schlesinger Library. The Maximum Access Project made impressive progress, with the 10 additional staff members who have joined this effort since 2007–2008 successfully processing 2,267 linear feet of manuscript material; completing descriptions for 8,000 audio-visual items; cataloging 7,000 published volumes; and creating at least minimal entries for another 5,000 published volumes. This year, the library also added to its holdings 72 new collections and approximately 2,600 print titles. It hosted more than 3,500 visitors whose research in the Schlesinger Library collections produced a significant number of monographs. Undergraduates continued to flock to the library for research on many diverse topics. One undergraduate was inspired to write a play based on the diaries of a Radcliffe student in A survey of manuscripts in the Harvard University Libraries confirmed that the extent and range of the Schlesinger Library’s manuscript collections is extraordinary. The library is ranked behind only the Harvard University Archives and the historical collections at Baker Library, while no other library in the Harvard University system outranks the Schlesinger Library in its diversity of topics. In honor of the 150th anniversary of Charlotte Perkins Gilman’s birth, the library digitized her lectures, correspondence, diaries, drawings, and drafts.

The Institute’s Academic Engagement Programs (AEP) continued to expand as the faculty leaders, assisted by new director Rebecca Wasserman, generated many exciting programs and activities. Faculty leaders in the sciences launched two new programs aimed at creating connections through informal discussions: Meet-the-Investigator Lunches brought students together with faculty, and Faculty-Fellow Roundtables connected faculty with current fellows. AEP also hosted three workshops on different facets of paper in anticipation of the “Why Books?” conference in the fall of 2010. This year’s gender conference, “Inside/Out: Exploring Gender and Space in Life, Culture, and Art” marked a first by featuring an artist on each panel, thus fully integrating the arts in line with Harvard’s newly launched Arts Initiative. It also marked the Institute’s first official collaboration with the Graduate School of Design. Corresponding exhibits at the Schlesinger Library and at the Graduate School of Design highlighted themes from the conference and reinforced the collaborative nature of this event. The science symposium focused on “Patterning in Nature,” bringing together scientists and scholars from around the world to consider natural patterns, from the microscopic aspects of chemical structures to the macroscopic array of objects in the sky. Social science faculty leaders mounted a workshop in May on “The Politics and Practice of Comparative Effectiveness Research” that drew faculty from six Harvard schools for a cross-disciplinary discussion regarding goals, conduct, and implementation of research on treatment effectiveness in US health care. This year’s Dean’s Lecture Series also attracted record audiences, with several lectures drawing capacity crowds. During the year, the Institute also brought faculty together to plan for the fall 2010 conference “Why Books?” on the history and future of the book, and for the spring 2011 gender conference, which will focus on the ways gender influences and interacts with health, education, shifting populations, politics, and technology and media in the developing world.

The 10th anniversary year closed with a remarkable Radcliffe Day celebration. Hundreds of alumnae/i filled the American Repertory Theatre for a panel discussion with Radcliffe College and Institute alumnae/i titled “Feminism Then and Now.” The Radcliffe Institute Annual Luncheon was a resounding success, with nearly 850 alumnae and friends of the Institute gathering to honor Gloria Steinem, the 2010 Radcliffe Institute Medalist. Steinem’s address was radical, rousing, thought-provoking, and entertaining. It was wonderful to see so many alumnae/i and friends come together for this occasion.

As we celebrated the achievements of our first decade, we also began to imagine the ways that the Institute might evolve in its second decade. In the spring, we launched a Long-Range Planning Process to develop a 10-year vision for the Institute. With this long-term view in mind, the process has focused on defining goals for the next five years. The Long-Range Planning Process engaged the efforts of a broad cross-section of the Institute’s constituents—including faculty, fellows, staff, and friends of the Institute—in working groups charged with identifying goals and objectives for the Fellowship Program, the Schlesinger Library, Academic Engagement Programs, and institutional support and infrastructure. A broad cross-section of the Institute’s constituents are represented in the working groups and in the Long-Range Planning Committee overseeing the process. Their overwhelming enthusiasm about the Institute’s work has been both gratifying and inspiring. The Long-Range Planning Process will help us to build strategically on the foundation of our first decade and launch us into our second with an ambitious but realistic plan that positions the Institute for continued success and expanded contributions to intellectual exploration at the frontiers of knowledge.

I hope you share my excitement about the future of the Radcliffe Institute, as well as my pride in the Institute’s past. The 2010–2011 academic year promises to be one of new growth and continued groundbreaking activity. I look forward to sharing news about the Institute’s activities and our Long-Range Planning Process with you in the coming months.

An art installation, Stock-Pile, was constructed in a corner of Radcliffe Yard to commemorate the Institute’s 10th anniversary. Still on display, the work consists of 12 piles of sand, soil, and stone; the piles are subject to the elements and have gently degraded over time. Chris Reed—founder and principal of Boston-based Stoss Landscape Urbanism, design critic at the Harvard Graduate School of Design, and adjunct associate professor at the University of Pennsylvania School of Design—created Stock-Pile at the request of Dean Barbara J. Grosz.

Celebration and Gratitude

The Radcliffe Institute’s 10th anniversary was a time to celebrate the outstanding accomplishments of the last decade. It also was a time to reflect on the extraordinary generosity of the many alumnae/i and friends who have helped to create this success.

The alumnae/i, friends, and past fellows who came together in October for the 10th Anniversary Symposium enjoyed an intimate look at the interdisciplinary exchanges and accomplishments that exemplify the Institute. Former fellows shared their cutting-edge work—from advances in medical science to the art of fiction writing—and experts in digital information discussed the future of scholarly research and collaboration. Harvard and Radcliffe College leaders who helped found the Institute reflected on Radcliffe’s remarkable transformation. At the celebration, Dean Barbara Grosz expressed her gratitude for the generosity and commitment of those whose support of the Institute assured its steady ascent to become one the premier institutes for advanced study in the world.

Over the last 10 years, 20 fellowships have been endowed, and numerous other endowed funds have been created to support the Schlesinger Library, Academic Engagement Programs, dean’s discretionary funds, programming for science and history, and the Radcliffe Research Partnership program. The Radcliffe Class of 1954 initiated a tradition of designating 50th reunion class gifts to the Schlesinger Library, a commitment that has been sustained by six subsequent classes. These classes have raised almost $1.9 million for the acquisition, processing, preservation, and digitization of collections at the Schlesinger Library. And thousands of alumnae/i, fellows, and friends have given each year to the Radcliffe Annual Fund, providing vital support for the Institute’s operating budget. The Institute’s success would not have been possible without the generosity and commitment of so many.

We also are deeply grateful to Radcliffe’s many friends who supported the scholarly and creative work of the Institute during the past year. Gifts and pledges to the Radcliffe Institute in FY10 totaled $2,848,591. This figure is lower than the previous year, a reflection of the economic landscape and a leaner advancement staff. Our efforts focused on current-use gifts and resulted in $1,809,895 in essential support for the core programs of the Institute, including $447,600 for the Maximum Access Project, so critically important to the Schlesinger Library.

Radcliffe Day drew more than 850 women and men to Radcliffe Yard to celebrate both Radcliffe College alumnae and the growing cohort of Radcliffe fellows. Cheers and a standing ovation greeted Radcliffe Medalist Gloria Steinem when Dean Grosz invited her to the podium to accept the award.
ious perspectives, filling the American Repertory Theatre to capacity. More than 500 guests attended. Earlier that morning, members of the Ann Radcliffe Society—those who have made a commitment to include the Institute in their estate plans—attended a breakfast featuring a fellow speaking about her research on Muslim women in Southeast Asia.

The year yielded several other highlights:

• The Radcliffe Alumnae Professorship and the Radcliffe Alumnae Fellowship, which were endowed with gifts from hundreds of alumnae, supported outstanding women faculty in the Faculty of Arts and Sciences. Sophie Morel, the first woman tenured in the mathematics department, was appointed to the Radcliffe Alumnae Professorship. Ann Pearson, professor of biogeochemistry in the Department of Earth and Planetary Sciences, was the inaugural Radcliffe Alumnae Fellow. She was granted tenure shortly before she began her fellowship.

• Alumnae/i in Los Angeles, New York City, San Francisco, and Washington, DC, heard Radcliffe fellows speak at events in those cities on topics as varied as the impact of World War II and the Algerian War on attitudes and practice in France; the endangered pernambuco tree and the impending crisis in classical music; racial and ethnic change in American politics; and form and function in nanotechnology, politics, and art.

• A rich array of programming—such as the gender conference, lectures, fellows’ talks, and the science symposium—drew numerous Boston area alumnae/i and friends to Radcliffe Yard to take part in the stimulating intellectual offerings of the Institute.

It has been a pleasure for me to lead the advancement office in this time of transition. The support of alumnae/i and friends and the commitment of our advancement staff in this anniversary year have been especially gratifying. Thank you for your generosity, your attendance at our events, and your informal yet critical role as ambassadors.

We look forward to the arrival of Associate Dean for Advancement Karen Putnam, who comes to the Institute with many years of experience in fundraising and nonprofit management. I know you will enjoy your interactions with her and that she, in turn, will enjoy the opportunity to engage you in the exciting work of the Institute.

August 2010
A Conservative Approach

Planning for the 2009–2010 fiscal year included sobering assumptions about reductions in endowment distribution each year for three years. The Radcliffe Institute is highly dependent on this source of revenue (76 percent of our income, when Harvard rents are restated as income). Our long-range projections indicated that we would need to cut the budget significantly in 2009–2010 to increase our reserves, allowing us to cover expected draws on the reserves in the next five years. Thanks to the hard work of our staff and leadership, we succeeded.

Revenue in 2009–2010 was 4 percent lower than in 2008–2009, but 9 percent higher than anticipated in the spring of 2009. Several funds that we expected to be underwater (with insufficient appreciation to support a full payout) were not, resulting in $1.6 million in additional revenue. Current-use gift income grew by 50 percent or $.8 million. Thanks to the efforts of the advancement team and our generous donors, annual giving—which we had expected to be flat or declining—grew by 5 percent, coming in at $.2 million more than budgeted. Restricted gift income and bequest income also exceeded our budget assumptions by $.6 million. As of June 30, 2010, the market value of our endowment is $465 million, an increase of 5 percent over the prior year.

The 12 percent decrease in 2009–2010 expenses was distributed across all areas of the Institute. Due to careful cost control by all our staff members, every department stayed within its budget. Spending in program costs went down 20 percent, with every program spending significantly less. We made program cuts, including reducing the number of events in the Academic Engagement Programs, decreasing the number of fellows, and staff reductions at the library. Both operations and advancement spent less in equally large amounts. Operations deferred most projects not deemed to be urgent, eliminated a part-time position, and achieved lower utility costs due to mild weather. Advancement costs were lower because of staff reductions and multiple staff vacancies.

Clearly, not all of these spending reductions are sustainable. We are, however, building back carefully, with an eye toward the goals and objectives of the Long-Range Planning Process that will be completed this fall. Two areas of growth in spending over 2008–2009 were the costs of the staff reductions ($ .3 million), a one-time cost, and an increase in interest on debt due to the fact that the Byerly Hall loan repayment started in the middle of 2008–2009.

Operating expenses include $.9 million in interest on debt and debt principal payments of $7.4 million. Our reserves increased more than expected because of the increase in revenue and decreases in expenses over original plans. We used this additional money to pay off the loan on the Radcliffe Gymnasium renovation. This will save us $.6 million per year over the next 16 years, including a reduction of interest on debt below the 2008–2009 level. As of June 30, 2010, the Institute had loans payable of $9.9 million (compared to $17.3 million on June 30, 2009). The Institute contributed $.3 million to funding capital projects in 2009–2010 for several small projects.

After operating expenses, capital costs, principal payments, and internal transfers of income, the Institute increased its total reserves by $5.6 million, of which $1.2 million carries no restriction. We received cash gifts totaling $.7 million in restricted and unrestricted current-use gifts and cash gifts for endowment of $.1 million in 2009–2010.
As we learn to navigate a world where finances are less predictable and markets may continue to be shaky, we believe our conservative approach to the underlying endowment, our long-range projections of the past two years, and the current Long-Range Planning Process position us well. We have a solid understanding of our resources and flexibility in funding, as it arises, as we work to realize the dean’s vision.

Though this is a financial summary, the value of the enthusiasm and conscientious efforts of Institute leadership and staff is priceless, and the support and generosity of our alumnae/i and friends is essential.
