Letter from the Dean

I am so pleased to be able to share with you the 2011–2012 Annual Report of the Radcliffe Institute for Advanced Study. This report is particularly special to me, as it covers the first year of my deanship.

I came to the Institute in July 2011 as interim dean. Being a historian, naturally I wanted to gather a sense of Radcliffe’s evolution—from a series of classes offered to women by Harvard faculty members at the turn of the 20th century, to Radcliffe College, to the Radcliffe Institute, Harvard’s institute for advanced study. Past annual reports—especially those from the late 1950s and early 1960s, when the program that became the Bunting Institute was developed—were invaluable in piecing that history together because they provided a glimpse into Radcliffe’s inner workings. I hope that this annual report, too, will give you a picture of “a year in the life of the Radcliffe Institute.”

And what a year it was! As you will see from these pages, we had a full calendar: conferences on women in the workplace, motors occurring in nature, the city-university connection, and women’s role in movements for democratic change; lectures by scholars, artists, and public intellectuals; fellows’ presentations, both public and nonpublic; faculty-led Exploratory Seminars on a staggering range of topics; lunches, receptions, and question-and-answer sessions with students; and exhibits displaying fellows’ art, exploring conference themes, and showcasing materials from the Schlesinger Library’s collections.

What may not be evident as you read this report is the amount of planning—and the valuable discovery process—that goes into this programming. Take our conference “Women Making Democracy,” for example. This event was the first task I set myself to upon being named interim dean. Planning began in July, with a core group of faculty members calling in to meetings from their summer locations and sending e-mails at all hours from different time zones. The energy around “Arab Spring” drove the process, and the program came together quickly. By early fall, we were able to turn our attention to developing a dramatic reading and panel discussion to open the conference and to planning related events all over the university. When the day of the conference finally arrived, we could not have been more pleased with the results of all of this planning. The gym was full to overflowing with nearly 400 attendees, and people tuned in online from all over the world to watch the live webcast. Video of the conference is now available on our website at www.radcliffe.harvard.edu/event/2012women-making-democracy.
In fact you can find video and further information about many of the activities and programs mentioned in this annual report on our new website, www.radcliffe.harvard.edu. One of the greatest accomplishments of 2012–2013 has been upgrading our website and our events spaces so that we can live webcast and videotape our public programming. These changes bring Radcliffe firmly into the 21st century and allow us to share the work we do with an audience that is not only broad and public, but also global.

I invite you to explore all the Institute has to offer—and I hope you will join us, either in person or via the Internet, very soon!

*Fall only
Spring only
Over the past year, the programs of the Radcliffe Institute for Advanced Study flourished thanks to your generous support. Your gift benefitted the people, programs, and collections that make the Institute such a unique and dynamic place. The appointment of Lizbeth Cohen as dean signaled a renewed vigor in our efforts to advance knowledge and connect with Harvard faculty members and students; with artists, scientists, social scientists, and scholars from other institutions; and with the public.

As a way of engaging audiences beyond Cambridge, we took “Radcliffe on the Road,” hosting events in New York, Chicago, San Francisco, and Palo Alto, reaching more than 400 individuals. The California events were titled “Radcliffe at the Crossroads of Science and Art,” and in New York, participants enjoyed programs by artists and astrophysicists and an evening backstage with Radcliffe Institute fellow John Tiffany RI ’12 at his production of Once.

Through our collaborations with the Harvard Alumni Association, we were able to reach out to local alumnae and those in reunion classes with invitations to special events at the Radcliffe Institute throughout the year. These included an informal talk by Nancy Cott before the Helen Horowitz lecture, “It’s Complicated: 375 Years of Women at Harvard,” and a luncheon during the “Women Making Democracy” conference. In addition, Dean Cohen participated in a 40th reunion event held at the home of Penny Grayson ’72. These events allow us to showcase the riches the Institute has to offer the Radcliffe and Harvard alumnae/i community.

In addition to the many events hosted by Academic Ventures and the lectures given by Radcliffe Institute fellows, the Schlesinger Library continued to expand and make more available its impressive collections. The library digitized 41 titles from the Radcliffe College Archives, including the Radcliffe Freshman Register, Courses of Instruction, and the Schlesinger Library Report. They also acquired 230 distinct collections, totaling 386.5 linear feet, and added 3,729 print volumes, including 350 volumes of culinary history and related domestic history. This additional content was made available to Harvard students and faculty, as well as outside researchers, many of whom cited the Schlesinger Library in their work.

To get the message out to the virtual world, the Advancement team worked to make our community of donors more visible on the Institute’s new website. This avenue of outreach has become increasingly important as online giving continues to grow and opportunities are created for individuals perusing the links to programing and watching our broadcasts. Through the dynamic new website, we hope our donors will feel even more connected to the work they support.

This is just a brief sample of the many ways we have worked to bring the rich intellectual life of the Institute to the Radcliffe/Harvard community and the world at large. The Radcliffe Institute is constantly evolving. Each year, a new crop of fellows settles in Radcliffe Yard to pursue advanced work across disciplines. Through Academic Ventures, the work of Harvard’s deep intellectual community is shared with the world. Finally, the Schlesinger Library shares its outstanding collections with thousands of students, faculty, and researchers. None of this would be possible without your support. Thank you!

Joan Moynagh
Director of Development
The Radcliffe Institute continues to return solid financial results, despite a high dependence on endowment distribution income. The 2011–2012 net result (change in reserves) was positive, despite increased spending and major capital investment.

Revenue increased 9 percent compared to the previous year, largely because of a 12 percent increase in the endowment distribution. Normal growth in the payout rate created a 4 percent increase, while new endowment funding provided the remainder of the growth. An 8 percent increase in rental income offset a decrease in bequest and cash gift income.

Higher program spending in 2011–2012 financed a growing set of new initiatives. The Fellowship Program increased the research partners program—in which undergraduates work with fellows—by 73 percent and also provided more graduate student support and fellow programming. The Schlesinger Library increased investment in equipment, staff training, acquisitions, and preservation and digitization projects. Academic Ventures doubled in size, reflecting a higher level of faculty participation and support and more programming in each discipline, including funding to develop an interactive website for the 2012–2013 “Take Note” conference and a growing public-policy Boston Area Research Initiative.

Nonprogramming spending increases funded the new Institute website, facility deferred maintenance, and operating costs related to capital projects. After depreciation, our adjusted “GAAP” operating result was $2.2 million.

In nonoperating activity, Radcliffe funded several large capital projects. These include upgrading the lighting and audiovisual capabilities of the Radcliffe Gym to improve audience experience and to enable us to web stream events, the final phase of our landscape master plan for the Radcliffe Yard, and renovations to Agassiz and Buckingham houses.

As of June 30, 2012, the Institute’s endowment had a market value of $524 million. Although this was a decrease of 4 percent over the prior June 30, new gifts to endowment helped mitigate the effect of the 2011–2012 endowment distribution and flat investment returns. Loans payable were $5.5 million at year-end.

The most recent five-year financial plan for the Institute incorporated funding for a capital reserve and demonstrated sufficient additional reserves to buffer our dependence on endowment income. The plan incorporated increased funding in each of our programs, and we hope that the support and generosity of our alumnae/i and friends will make it possible to fund the additional ambitious and exciting plans developed by Dean Cohen and our program directors, which still remain on the drawing board.
